Brian Rabinovitz achieves CM&AA certification – the “gold standard” for middle market corporate financial advisors

For immediate release

Los Angeles—December 10, 2008—CM&AA certification has been granted to Brian Rabinovitz, CPA, principal and business advisor at Stonefield Josephson, a California-based certified public accounting firm. In the first and only advanced, national educational certificate program of its kind for business leaders and advisory professionals, the Alliance of Merger and Acquisition Advisors (AM&AA) has partnered with Loyola University Chicago’s Executive Education to offer this certification in the middle marketplace arena of mergers and acquisitions.

“The goal of the CM&AA certification is quite simple, but lofty,” explains Rabinovitz. “It is to maintain the highest recognized standards of professional excellence for corporate advisory and transaction services, while providing a recognized standard of professional expertise within that overall body of knowledge.”

Since AM&AA’s formation in 1998, its members have formed an international alliance of independent accountants, attorneys, investors, and financial advisors whose focus is on serving the special corporate financial advisory and transaction needs of privately held, middle market businesses. AM&AA’s network of nearly 500+ member firms specialize in offering a wide variety of merger & acquisition and other related corporate financial advisory services.

“CM&AA certification is important,” adds Rabinovitz, “because it recognizes an individual’s professional achievement and competence, serves as a tool to both attract and better serve clients, provides identification with other professionals in the field, and stimulates career advancement.” For more information about M&A and transactional activities for middle market businesses, contact Brian Rabinovitz at 310-453-9400 or brabinovitz@sjaccounting.com.
